POWER OF RHYME.

Good rhymes live in the memory like exists of verse, and they very often communicate good. One very sweet in sentiment and melody recalls two lovers in China. It may be familiar to our readers:

"One sweet lily seemed the bright
Comes to me o'er and o'er,
I am nearer home to-day
Than I ever have been before.

"Nearer my father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea.

"Nearer the portals of the
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving the cross,
Nearer gaining the crown."

Two Americans—one a young man, the other very forty—were drinking and playing at cards in a gambling house in China. While the older one was studying the cards the younger became calm, and sang in a low tone, but quite unconsciously, this hymn. The older one threw down the cards on the floor and said:

"Harry, where did you learn that tune?"

"What tune?"

"Why, that one you have been singing."

The young man said he did not know what he had been singing. But when the older one repeated some of the lines he said that they were earliest in the Sunday-school.

"Come, Harry," said the older one, "come, here's what I've won from you. As for me, as God sees me, I have prayed my last game and drunk my last bottle. I have missed you, Harry, and I'm sorry for it. Give me your hand, my boy, and say that, for America's sake, if for no other, you will quit this infernal business."

Colonel Russell Conwell, who was then visiting China and was an eye-witness of the scene, says that the reformation was a permanent one.—Youth's Companion.

FOREIGN AND THE UNITED STATES.

Let us honestly accept the truth, and manfully apply the remedy. The peril in our American life is not stones, but Sin, which produces the decay of conscience, which is the root of panics. Slavery involved us in a civil war. The latter is to involve ourselves in a still severer retribution. The ulcer is less offensive than the putrescence of the grave. Our very existence is at stake. American life presents an anomalous spectacle. We are socially, purely and commercially depraved.

Mechanics, overseers, nurses, contractors, architects, have been arrested. Constables, policemen, collectors, inspectors, weighers, measurers, gaugers, postmasters, have been arrested, judges, juries, legislators, governors, have been arrested. The consequence is distrust and faith in each other, and sometimes a distrust of our country and humanity, with a fear, that is a shadow, on a innocent European and American societies is not the account of ancient Babylon and Rome. Our faith alone saves us from despair. That is sufficient, but not here to be discussed.—International Review.

"DO NOT MENTION IT."

A writer on "social intercourse" says: Mr. Martin, the eminent painter, was accustomed at one time to have conversaziones at his house, at which there never was any person who was not eminent in some department of literature or art. They generally consisted of about seventy persons, and they were remarkable for their pleasant character. One thing a sad remark was that there was extreme politeness and courtesy among them. Although it began to be thought that men should bring their wives, and that in a few instances were married, women of eminence had been admitted, they should be a liberty to bring their husbands. In a little while after, the wives of the literati and artists greatly on admission to bring with them female friends who happened to be staying with them. Thus a large infusion of common-place mortals took place. The consequence was that the meetings fell off very much in attractiveness, and that a great deal more of eating and drinking was observed. So much was he later circumstance remarked, that the host found it necessary to give up the use of wine; then he gave up everything but supper. The common-place people being thus disgusted, and the elite having meanwhile ceased to see any pleasure in attending, these conversaziones were at last entirely given up, after they had run with more or less success for about seven years."

A REMINISCENCE.

A tiger, prowling in a forest, was attracted by a bleating calf. It proved to be a goat, and the tiger, forgetting himself, trapped in a spring cage. There he lay for two days, when a certain benevolently inclined man was moved by these entreaties, and opened the door of the cage, the tiger was set up to him, wagged his tail, and said: "Old man, be sure to let me see you again, now I am not your enemy." "Oh, you ungrateful brute!" said the man, "how wicked! Am I not your saviour?" "True," said the tiger; "very true, but it is the custom of my race to eat a man when we get a chance, and I cannot afford to let you go." "Let us submit the case to an arbitrator," said the man. "There comes a fox. The fox is wise; let us ask his decision." "Very well," replied the tiger. The fox assuming a judicial aspect, sat on his haunches with a dignity he could muster, and looking at the disputants, he said:

"Good friend, I am somewhat confused at the different accounts which you give of the matter; my mind is not clear enough to render equitable judgment; but if you will be good enough to set the whole transaction before my eyes, I shall attain unto a more definite conception of the case. So you, Mr. Tiger, show me how you approached and entered the cage; and then you, Mr. Braman, show me how you liberated him and I shall be able to render a proper decision."

They assented, for the fox was solemn and oracular. The tiger walked into the cage, the spring door fell and shut him in. He was a prisoner. The judicial expression left from the fox's countenance, and turning to the Braman, said: "Now you are safe, for as you can, and again in future from doing favor to brute tigers. Good morning, Braman—good morning, tiger."

Beecher says in the United States is a long and broke nose and growing in the opposite.

A little three-year old, down East recently said: "Mamma, no things—boo boo sick—Sunday can't be doing."

VARIETIES.

Proteus, the conjurer, says that the way to make a story seem short is to tell it slowly.

"The man who expects to get ahead before he dies by putting others back ain't going to get a great ways from where he started.—Josh Billings.

"Good manners," says Swift, "is the art of making those people easy with whom we converse; whoever makes the fewest persons uneasy is the best bred man in the company."

Mary, after looking on while his new little sister cried at being washed and dressed, turned away, saying, "If she screamed like that upon heaven, I don't wonder they send her off."

One day recently the person in charge of the late A. T. Stewart's house had the saltcellars cut from glass to glass coating by a party of ladies and gentlemen who found the coating on a set, and supposed it to have been Mr. Stewart's.

An exchange having said, "Spend your idle time in the garden," the Girard Press tartly responds: "That advice just suits us, for if there is any time that we like to be idle, it is when we are in the garden."

Jones says the talk about shortening the hours of labor" is a nonsense because the hours were shortened he would have to take more of them to do his work. He don't want to work more hours.

There is said to be excellent punctuation for a story, which is generally credited in Washington, that a reporter of a New York morning paper, succeeded in witnessing the wedding at the White House, by disguising himself as a waiter, and assisting the caterer at the breakfast table.

The latter of Brigham Young was a Methodist, but an eccentric man. He wanted his children to be Christians; and as a means of making them such, he promised to give a sheep to the one who would kneel and make the best prayer. They all kneeled and Brigham got the prize.

A clergyman being asked to, in less than a year after his appointment, to put a stove in the church, asked how long he had been there, and, when answered, "Twelve years," he said, "Well, you never had a fire in the church during his time?" "No, sir," replied the deacon, "but we have fire in the pulpit then."

Josh Billings says: Cherrings in a hot tea and general fix; but those who live on hot tea grocery a while taste to me as though they had been attended on salt. They want a deal of seasoning before they're eaten, and also afterward. I can have plenty of herring for breakfast, generally make the other two meals out of water."

"What are you hallowing about, Bill?" said a mother at the stair-foot, one evening, after her two sons had been out to bed. "Please mother," said he, "Tom wants a piece of bread." "Well," said she, "let him have it, and you take the other piece." "Yes, right here," says Bill, "but he will have his half out of the middle, and it tastes me see on both sides of him."

Bright's atrocious epigrams were known. On one occasion, while stopping at the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, his hat was stolen from his room. The infuriated tenant rushed down to the office and propounded the following question to one of the clerks: "Derrick or Derrices. Yesterday was one hair brush, today, what am I?"

A little fellow, five or six years old, who had been wearing undershirts much too small for him, was one day, after having been washed, put into a garment as much too large as the others had been too small. Our six-year-old struggled in the sleeves, shook himself, was set around, and finally burst out with, "Ma, I do feel awful lonesome in this shirt."

Three men comparing notes: One says, "There are two bugs to every stalk." A second says, "They cut down my early crop, and are sitting on the fence waiting for the late crop to come up." "Shaw!" said the third, "you don't know anything about it. I passed a seed store the other day, and the bugs were looking over the lots to see who had purchased seed potatoes."

Slightly sarcastic was the clergyman who addressed an accused man coming into court after the sermon had begun with the remark, "Glad to see you, sir; come in: always glad to see those here at the who can't come early." And decidedly self-possessed was the man thus addressed in the presence of an astonished congregation as he responded: "Thank you; I would you favor me with the text?"

There is a capital story illustrating American humor some years ago, in which it is related that, "A coach drove through the country to Ashford, and the mile-stones passed so quickly by, that the passengers thought they were in a churchyard." This coach, however, was beaten by the "sculler," which "went so tarnation fast, that in passing round Long Ann's elbow I seed my shadow three and a half miles behind her."

A French lawyer recently defended a man who had stolen a chicken from a farm-yard. He said his client was insane. "He could not see in this he any thing that would account for the insanity of the prisoner," said the judge. "Beg your pardon," replied the lawyer; "that proves how is certainly insane. He stole a wretched skinny chicken, when he might have taken a nice fat pig."

There is no people in the world with whom eloquence is so universal as with the Irish. When Lieutenant Ritchie was leaving Ireland, he passed a man who was a bailiff, a collector of rents, or something of that sort, and he turned back and said: "If you are in want," said Ritchie, with some degree of pecuniary delicacy, "why don't you beg?" "Sure it's begging I am, yer honour." "You don't say a word." "Of course not, yer honour; but see how the skin is splitting through the seat of me trousers, and the bone comin' out through me skin! Look at me sunken cheeks, and the famine that's starin' in me eyes! Am I not a beggin'—am I not a miserable tongues?"

Yesterday those curious in such matters would be glad to hear how the country house of the late A. T. Stewart's compares in matters of taste in furniture. Each bed-room is of a different color, but in all of them reigns a rose. The carpets throughout are of the same pattern, wainscots, doors, and furniture are also of the same, with a little gilding introduced. The windows are hung with curtains covered with the same cretonne as the curtains and bed furniture. Each bed has an eider down quilt, covered with the same cretonne, and each window has plain muslin curtains, with gathered frills as well as cretonne curtains. Ottomans are coming into great favor now in the decoration of houses; and lace workers are beginning to see that furniture lace never blows to suit the vandalage as ordinary velvet, or plain satin, received woven draperies, either for writing or reading tables, mantelpieces, brackets, or the like. This introduction of lace fashion is more Grecque than revival; for sofas and wall, carved, painted, and gilded, as well as new.

WANT A LIFE.

There is nothing more fortunate for moderate genius than to be born poor. The "silver spoon" class are a very comfortable people, no doubt, but the great trouble with them is their education is mainly of this order, and if they don't become very great they are extremely apt to become the very opposite. Poverty has set men to solve the greatest problems of life. All its brave deeds have been a necessity, and the most of its noble sayings have been born of a determined opposition. Rebels a man good, to put him at his wit's ends. Emergencies make men. Any man can be a general or a pilot in a calm; but storms show the metal. Reputation is made more by boldness and will than by ability and patience. Life is too short to wait for the time when fellow-leaves on to fortune. We must make the most of present opportunities, but we shall hardly do it, unless present opportunities are in the main present necessities. The man who works out these to the fullest extent is the most successful man.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

North Conway, Ohio, is said to have had no open dram-shop for several years past. The results are seen and felt. In a population of 2,000, only three persons have been seen drunk in a whole year. They were promptly arrested and fined. In two of the three times of criminal court last year, there was no criminal case on the docket. There have been only six men in jail for the last three years, and there has been no one arrested for trial on a penitentiary offense for three years. The criminal expenses before closing the dram shops were $2,000 a year. Since including cost of grand jury three terms only $500. Was there ever a clearer or more convincing statement made? Can any one now doubt the true relationship existing between "cause and effect?" Like causes will produce like results, and according to the seed sown will be the crop. So long as the people expose laws evil to regulate, just so long will they gather the bitter fruits of liquor crime, pauperism, taxation.

"Well, Patty, what are your thoughts about marrying?" said a young lass of 20 one day to a recent spinster, as both had reached the shady side of life with nothing betwixt them. "Indeed, Jessie," quoth Patty, "before five years, and but three months about it as you days, I'm the happiest girl to be married in all Christendom. But, when I was young, like yourself, I thought, 'What I take from the time I began to wear by, I shall be thinking, 'What I get?' and after I got my dog to sit with whimsies out of saunders. My thoughts carry my thoughts by the way, 'What I bring?' And I count the time Patty has the same thoughts I shall hang to my grave, unless something happens mair by ordinar."

THE QUEEN'S CORNER.

There is a shadow on some times,
When dreams of hate and war,
One on the shore in pattern,
And one at the heaven-ward gate,
Thinking, "For one not in the morn.
Then, in the evening it may,
But one knew not thinking of the soul,
Worked till the close of day;
Looking has eyes at the evening time,
So, there is ship at anchor lay.

One thing is clear enough, that no intelligence or passion destroys the spiritual nature so much as respectable selfishness.—Dr. Dewey.

Some bodily training, such as work, drill, or digest will cost effort, are obviously necessary to grandeur of manner or of science, or to proper development of genius.—Bacon.

Dr. Arnold of Rugby when he made his remarks about boys that appreciated their sentimental admiration of virtue: "I have seen enough of boys that over God. Commend me now to boys that not only love God, but hate the devil."

Writers of every age have endeavored to show that pleasure is in us and not in the object offered for our amusement. If the soul be happily disposed, everything becomes capable of affording entertainment, and distress will almost want a name.—Goldsmith.

Wealth and poverty are seen for what they are. It begins to be seen that the poor are only they who feel poor, and poverty consists in seeing poor. The rich, we feel for them, and among them the very rich, in a true sense would be ours very indigent and ragged.—Emerson.

The ancients have but one word for manners and morals. They might be well if the same were the case for us; yet with this essential difference, that while they degraded morals to the level of manners, a higher culture would lead us to raise manners to the level of morals.

No matter how good the walls and materials are, if the foundations are not strong. The building will not stand. By and by, in some upper room, a crack will appear, and men will say, "There is the crack, but the cause is in the foundation." So, if in youth, you lay the foundation of your character wrong, the penalty will be sure to follow. The crack may be all down in old age, but somewhere it will certainly appear.

Mr. Johnson use to say that a rabbit looking at the best side of every event is better than a thousand sour sons a year. Bishop Hall quietly remarks: "For every bad there might be a worse; and when a man reasons himself, let him be thankful that it was not his case." When Penn's library was on fire, "God be praised," he exclaimed, "that it is not the fire of some poor man!" That is the true spirit of submission, one of the most beautiful traits that can possess the human heart. Resolve to see this world on its sunny side, and you have a most half won battle at the outset.

"Two things a master commits to his servant's care," said one, "the child and the child's clothes." Such is a poor excuse for the servant to say at his master's return: "Sir, here are all the child's clothes, neat and clean, but the child is lost!" And so with the account that many will give to God of their souls and bodies at the great day: "Lord, here is my body; and, an very gracious one it." Neglected nothing that we might to its content and comfort; but of my soul, that is lost and cast away forever. I took little care and thought about it."—Flavel.

It may seem strange, but it is nevertheless true, that a corpulent, regularly addicted to any farmer's stomach, will remove the inquest from the fence, let cattle into his crops, girdle fruit trees, mortgage his farm, and sow gas lime with wife and children. We make the assertion after mature deliberation, and from the best of the materials and facilities afforded us. Take the goose from his dinner, and you take away from his mind, for the time being, all sense of duty, all reason, and make him sorrow and strife, and perhaps send him into a drunkard's grave. It will go hard with the artisan and the capitalist, and the statesman and the manager, as well as the farmer, or in its dear humanity to the human race, knows no respect of persons.

Notice is given in another column of a quarterly meeting of the County Stock-growers Association, to be held next Saturday afternoon.

The following closes a letter to the Commissioners of the Second District, received this morning:

"I would like to know if anything can be done to keep cattle from running on the streets of Colorado Springs. Cattle are a nuisance, and should not be allowed to run at large. Yours truly, Subscriber."

Let us have a law to prevent cattle from running on the streets of Colorado Springs. Cattle are a nuisance, and should not be allowed to run at large. Yours truly, Subscriber.

HOW TO SET A TENT HOUSE ON FIRE.

1. Rub your furniture with linseed oil, and preserve carefully all the oily rags used for this purpose, in a paper box in an out-of-the-way place.

2. Make a fire in the stove does not burn well, pour benzine or kerosene on it from a can.

3. When you light your cigar or the gas, throw the burning match no matter where — and don't look after it, even if it gets into the waste-paper basket.

4. Put a burning candle on the shelf of a closet and forget all about it.

5. Always keep in readiness, you will observe, with the cap-sheaf burning near you.

6. Especially in order to put the ends of the wooden beams into the fire-wall, and if you can't get at furnaces, be careful to use as much wood as possible in their construction.

Always buy the cheapest kerosene you can get. — Fire Builder.

CONFESSION.

A preacher in the Highlands of Scotland, having run short of butter, applied to a farmer's wife for a supply.

"How much do you want?" saw the woman.

"A pound will do," said the preacher.

"I wanna make you a pun," said the woman.

"Why?"

"That my pun weight."

"Wee, wee, weight half ye?" said the weighter.

"Two pun," said the woman.

"And what is the weight?" said the man.

"O, it's just the lungs," (tongue).

"Wee," said he, "I'll put one leg in the scale and collect out, also, that'll be a pun."

She did as requested, but when it was weighed, she looked dolefully at the butter and said:

"It looks a large pun."

"It's a big pun, woman, how much is it?" said the peddler.

"A sixpence," was the reply, which the peddler said and hastily departed, lest she should discover how she had been cheated.

BUSINESS ADVERTISING.

It seems to be a question, in all the public discussions which we read, that the recession of business with us is shared by all the rest of the world. People may speculate as they choose, about the causes, but the fact is the great commercial nations, the great manufacturing nations, and not doing so much business as in prosperous years. The great agricultural regions must, whether they would or not, abide the result of the checks in business. They can stand it better than the rest can. For they are never in hard pass. At all events, they have enough to eat. They will be content with bread and butter, and roughest milk, they will be content with water. People can say in regions where factories are running at full time, or where little family work-shops are the chief thing, "Nay, it cannot be said very severely as a general fact that the times, whose evil effects have been thrown up by war, or are simply now suffering universal war-time Sprain." But when it comes to such suffering as the world under, one sees what it is to have one's head high out and cut in a check of the ties across the world, it is easy to see that goods accustomed to seek business are going to be set right by any notion of ingenious advertising, and that, however, will carry us through, and there is no short-hand process yet invented which will do it easier. — L. O. Holland's Land and Water.

THE COLOSSEUM.

By and by, perhaps we shall get a "seat in the amphitheatre" (that word, considered from a purely business point of view, doesn't it?) indeed, it is the present fashion of amusements. It is high time we did. Every Monday morning sets the American public gaping on the tenters, the dead walls of the town have burst, and the walls of one hundred and fifty people, and divers bills of fare, "can't pretty plain figuring that, in this age sham hasn't paid." Asses from the west of one hundred dollars and cents, money value, measured in dollars and cents, as corporations are beginning to find out, a good many hundred thousand dollars worth of property accumulates by the axiom and truth for years, has been wiped out in a very few minutes. Such is the failure of the reservoir's owners to see that it was honesty and substantially built in the first instance, a petty economy of penny-wisdom, and penal consequence. The Ides is out one case out of hundreds and thousands. This a lamentable and alarming fact, that sham work of all sorts has become very common with us of late years, so common as to be accepted by too many, of course, as a matter of course. Every intelligent man sees the fact, every thoughtful man deplores it, but how rarely a shorter word for it shall be used, — for once a lie and a theft. But the evil can have got hold of a law of the universe when they say in their games that cheating never prospers. It may seem to stop per for a while. Witness the Tweed, witness Gaspar Ames; witness others and score of men who have flourished for a season on the street. But the prosperity that is not on rock goes but on the sand; one day the flood comes, there is a crash, and that is the end. The sham reservoir gives way; the sham house tumbles in. The sham fire-proof city shrivels to ashes; the sham values collapse; the sham banks break; the sham statesmanship, Christian or otherwise, is found out. Carlyle was right: "Lying is not permanent in this universe." The Almighty has set its cannon against it. It is as the political economy as it is as morals. The worst of it is that part of the penalty always and unavoidably falls upon the innocent. — Springfield Republican.

Negroes make first-class mirrors," but in Watertown they are a decided improvement on the white professional article. They strive to understand the lawyers, and look to the judge for instruction with the most childlike faith and concern. A judge who had a colored jury in Tennessee, discovered that his twelve incarnations were in the habit of taking their last words and worship them into a verdict. He would close his charge, for example, by saying, "you will retire, gentlemen, and after due deliberation, return a verdict of guilty or not guilty." He never could get "not guilty." Observing this, he reversed his words when he thought the defendant worthy of such a verdict. This worked very well, until one day, in reference to one of a number of counts in emotional insanity, due to his amazement at his having been brought in a verdict of the effect that they "found the defendant guilty of homicide, insanity."

Washington society may be the bright flower of our civilization, and all that; but what are we to make of this, which we find in the Cincinnati Commercial? "There is a very ugly story going the rounds of the press to the effect that at the wedding of Miss Stewart the refreshments gave out. The facts are these: Toward the close of the evening there was such rioting — for it can be called by no other name — in the supper-room, such crushing, such breakage of the glassware and dishes, as to bring the matter to the notice of the hostess to get rid. The answer to the inquiry, that Miss Stewart ordered the supper-room to be closed — but such scenes transpired at the last ball given by Mr. Corcoran in honor of the debut of his daughter, and they have been repeated in this city in a greater or less degree at every large entertainment given since."

HAPPY ACCIDENTS.

The cracking of a picture placed in the sunshine set Van Eyck experimenting to produce a varnish that would dry in the shade. The chance, what he sought, and found besides that by mixing it with colors he accelerated a greater accordancy, and required no subsequent varnishing; and so came about the discovery, or rediscovery, of painting in oil. Mezzotinto owed its invention by Prince Rupert to the simple accident of a sentry's gun-barrel being rusted by the dew. Henry Schanwarg, a Nuremberg glass-cutter, happened to set some aqua fortis upon his spectacles, and noticed the glass was corroded, and so tended where the aqua fortis had touched it. Taking the hint, he made a similar engraving, drew some figures upon a piece of glass, covered them with varnish, and applied his corroding fluid, eat away the glass around his drawing, so that when it removed the varnish the figures appeared raised upon a clear ground; and, etching upon glass was added to the ornamental arts. A certain Senefelder, a playright then poor, but with a wife who was a washerwoman, was in despair, unable to write his plays, because he could not afford to buy paper. Having neither paper nor ink handy, Senefelder scribbled the items on his stone with his etching preparation, and, being at a loss to copy them at his leisure. Sometime afterward, when about to clean the stone, he thought he might as well see what would be the effect of filling the stone with aqua fortis, and in a few minutes saw the writing stand out in relief. Taking up a pen all charged with printing ink, he inked the stone, took off a few impressions upon paper, and invented lithography. Thus the discoveries were made by Senefelder was long unsuspected in a printing office. A Bavarian printer, in a hurry to get on with his job, could not find his sponge, and instead, the form with a sheet of soaping glue that had been, out of the glue pot, with which expedient he set that he therefore discarded the sponge altogether, and by accustoming his device to keep it from hardening, hit upon the composition of which printers' rollers are ever since composed. Thus very little great discoveries are recorded to have resulted from the unintentional application of intense heat. To one attributes the discovery of glass to some merchants traveling with nitre, who, stopping upon the banks of a river to take a meal, were at a loss for stones to rest their kettles upon. Putting them upon pieces of nitre, they kindled their fires; the nitre, dissolving by the heat, mixed with the sand, and the merchants were astonished to see a transparent matter flowing over the ground, which was nothing else but glass. Charles Goodyear had for years experimented in vain, hoping to improve India rubber so as to render it by the action of heat and cold. Conversing with a friend on the subject, he emphasized his assertion by flinging a piece of the gum upon the stove; it fell across the room. Eager to regain the stove, and which he presently did a few days afterward, he found, the intense heat to which it had been subjected, had conferred upon the India rubber just the quality he so long strove to impart to it. According to some, he had received upon the very spot a different change; but, at any rate, vulcanized India rubber was the creation of an accident. A Nameless shave-nist, looking carefully at his razor-strop, noticed that some of them, after trying the contents of certain canisters, carefully inside their waistcoat pockets from there. He owed suit, and found that the small tax came out of the fiery ordeal very much improved. In exigency and aroma like a wise man, he said nothing, and took no other notice, but by a lot of owners, and before long that's yarn small otherwise "right-hand-guard" was the rage with lovers of [illegible] and after a few years many of us had attained one in a few accidents thought was a rich man, owing to the accidents thought to discover what mixture of earth would make the strongest crucibles, one day found that he'd made some diamonds instead of "transmuting" metals, as he had looked to do, forgetting "transmuted unseen, may be had been found by a conjurer's wand, it was on a subject [illegible] from an alchemist into a potter. — London Journal.

CUSTOM.

Some forty years ago, the managers of a race course, near Brown's corner, in Mississippi, in order to draw a very fine State, published the notice of a race, giving the purse, on particular day, for a purse of $100, to be run for by any thing with four legs and hair on. A man in the neighborhood, named Ayres, had a horse that was in the habit of running to the mill with his bag of corn, and he determined to enter him for the race. He said nothing about it to anyone, but he rode him around the track night after nights, and the last night of the [illegible] he was seen by several persons. The next day was the race, which the horse won, he would have been permitted to bring upon the ground. The thing would not have done as it did.

Upon this, Ayres took them that his colt could beat any of their horses, and they would put up $100 against the purse, if he won, he would take off the owner and leave his horse and run a fair race with them. This offer was accepted, and his money staked. They again took their places at the starting post, and the signal was given. Ayres gave his colt another tremendous blow, and the horses reached the horrible sound, and thought all the rest was coming as before. Away they went, again in spite of the exertions of the riders, while Ayres galloped his colt around the track again and won the money. From that time they named him "Sham" Ayres. Afterward removed to Ohio, but his nickname stuck to him as long as he lived.

"Doctor," said a Dutch acquaintance to Professor Agassiz, "you once said that fish is the proper food for brain-work to perform. How much ought one to eat to one meal?" "About two pounds," was the reply.
